

BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION FINANCE

CONCENTRATION

Financial analysts use data to value assets and make data-driven decisions.

UCR's business administration major with a finance concentration ensures students attain proficiency in valuation, a fundamental skill applicable to all future finance careers. Finance career paths typically fall into three primary categories: investments, corporate finance, and commercial banking.

- 1. Investments: involves the valuation of assets including stocks, bonds, and venture capital to make informed investment decisions.
- 2. Corporate finance: encompasses the valuation of projects to identify the most beneficial and cost-effective initiatives for a company.
- 3. Commercial banking: combines real estate lending, banking services, and personal loans. Additionally, commercial banking may involve investing in companies, making it a blend of project and securities valuation.
